

The Jaguarundi

Hi, I am a Jaguarundi and I'm gonna tell you all about me. My favorite lunch is bunnies and deers. I have pretty blue eyes and an orange coat.

I love my home! I live in the forest and I love the forest because I can jump high and run and catch my prey. My head and body is about 3.25 feet. Here are some fun facts about me. If I'm endangered that means you will have rats forever in your life! When I go to my mom and dad's house for dinner, I eat rats with my family.

Like I said, us Jaguarundi have a ginger coats and a little bit of white dots on the fur and has pretty blue sky eyes and little fuzzy ears.

My Jaguarundi family lives in North America and South America and we eat rabbits and deers. We live in forests and swamps and deserts. Our most dangerous predators are bears and wolves,

We Jaguarundi have been endangered since 1976, says Endangered.org, and maybe there's hunters that kill us because maybe they use our pretty coat as clothes. If poachers keep killing us we will have lots of rats.

Thank you for learning about Jaguarundi! If you love these animals this is what you can do to save us, if your dad is a hunter or anybody else, tell them don't shoot us because we eat rats that a lot of people hate. So if you hate mice let the Jaguarundi do our job because we are sweet and nice and if you shoot us I guess good luck on the mice.

Sources:

Endangered.org

Ecos.fws.gov

Kidsnationalgeographic.com